13. The life of woollen and flannel underclothing is often shortened owing to a lack of knowledge of correct methods of washing. Woollen or flannel articles cannot be immersed in water of a temperature above 135 F. (56 C.) without serious shrinkage taking place. To obtain the best results, a temperature of 95 F. (35 C.) should not be exceeded. The method of washing flannel shirts worsted socks and woollen goods is as follows.
The water in which the articles are washed should be lukewarm only. They should on no account be put into boiling or even hot water, if excessive shrinking is to be avoided. The articles must be well rinsed in clean tepid water before drying. Yellow soap only should be used, and the use of washing powder should be prohibited. A little ammonia (one tablespoonful to two gallons of water) may be added to remove grease and perspiration.
After the water has been completely wrung out of them the articles should be well pulled out by hand before dryin.
