The Australian Academy of Cinema and Television Arts (AACTA) today announced the winners of its inaugural AACTA International Awards, recognising international excellence across five categories: Best Film, Best Direction, Best Screenplay, Best Actor and Best Actress.

Winners were announced at the AACTA International Awards Ceremony in Los Angeles, with Geoffrey Rush, AACTA President and recently announced Australian of the Year, leading a line-up of outstanding Australians presenting Awards at the Ceremony: Nicole Kidman, Russell Crowe, Phillip Noyce, Liam Hemsworth and Bella Heathcote.

Elegant and nostalgic, the black and white, almost completely silent film The Artist, was the big winner at the AACTA International Awards, being awarded Best Film for producer Thomas Langmann, and Best Direction for French director Michel Hazanavicius. The film’s lead actor, Jean Dujardin, was awarded Best Actor for his powerful performance as George Valentin, a star of the silent film era, struggling to adjust to the arrival of the ‘talkies’. Dujardin was in attendance at the Ceremony, with Russell Crowe presenting the Best Actor Award.

The multi-award winning Meryl Streep also attended the Ceremony, and was awarded the AACTA International Award for Best Actress for her role in The Iron Lady; the Award was presented by Nicole Kidman. The Award saw Streep trump five other nominees in this highly contested category with her impressive portrayal of formidable former British Prime Minister, Margaret Thatcher.

The award for Best Screenplay proved fiercely competitive, with two joint winners announced after jury voting was tied in this category. The two winners were the adapted screenplay from The Ides of March for George Clooney, Grant Heslov and Beau Willimon, and the original screenplay from Margin Call for first time writer and director J.C. Chandor.

In addition to Award recipients and presenters, the inaugural AACTA International Awards Ceremony attracted a star-studded line up of guests, including Harvey Weinstein, Kathy Bates, Francis O’Connor, Joel Edgerton and Keith Urban.

The AACTA International Awards recognise film excellence regardless of geography, as determined by a jury of eminent Australian screen practitioners from a cross-section of crafts, and with a wealth of local and international experience.

Speaking of the AACTA International Awards, AACTA President Geoffrey Rush said:

"The Australian Academy’s newly launched International Awards are dedicated to identifying and awarding the pinnacle of screen excellence and success regardless of geography.

"Some 70 years since our American friends first awarded Australians with an Oscar, and with Australians since awarded more than 60 Oscars and BAFTAs, it’s great that the Australian industry now has the opportunity to formally recognise the outstanding work of our international colleagues through the AACTA International Awards.

"As our industry becomes a truly global entity, with screen performers and practitioners crossing borders to bring us the best of the big and small screens, it is fitting that the new Australian Academy recognises the industry’s best, both at home and abroad."

AFI | AACTA CEO, Damian Trewhella, said:

"Australia has produced some of the best screen professionals and productions in the world, and an important part of the Australian Academy’s role is to recognise and promote this. One of the key vehicles for this is the annual AACTA Awards – Australia’s highest screen accolades, and the Australian equivalent of the BAFTAs and Oscars.

"By announcing and presenting our first ever AACTA International Awards in Los Angeles in January, we have established the AACTA Awards as part of the global screen awards conversation, drawing greater recognition for our Awards, our talented award recipients, and the Australian screen industry.

"On behalf of AFI | AACTA, I congratulate all inaugural AACTA International Award winners, and acknowledge the role they have played in this proud moment in Australian screen history," Trewhella said.

Clips from the AACTA International Awards Ceremony will be shown at the inaugural Samsung AACTA Awards Ceremony at the Sydney Opera House on 31 January 2012, broadcast throughout Australia on the Nine Network at 9:30pm AEST.
