Outcare awarded contracts to empower Western Australians to thrive

Outcare will continue the valuable work they do in the Western Australian community through Thrive, a new support program for Aboriginal housing and public housing empowering individuals and families to live their best lives.

Outcare, a service stream of Nulsen Group, were yesterday awarded the significant five years contracts commencing imminently to deliver services in the Southwest, Great Southern, North Metropolitan, South Metropolitan and South East Metropolitan regions of Western Australia.

Lucy Henry, Executive Director said the Outcare team was very excited to have the opportunity to see the business continue to enhance people's lives by looking at the wider needs of the individual.

"We are pleased to be awarded the contracts to deliver Thrive in these Western Australian communities. The program will have a person-centred approach ensuring clients live their best lives by building their skills and knowledge to reach their social and economic goals," Lucy said.

"The program will have a strong focus on early intervention; supporting people to identify and tackle problems that are important to them. It will also support clients to improve their life skills, increase their ability to manage their household independently, and participate in their community," Lucy said.

Thrive is a wonderful addition to Outcare's existing portfolio of reintegration services helping all Australians to fully engage with society in a positive contributing manner.

"We look forward to building on our more than 50 years' experience in helping tens of thousands of people establish long term sustainable support networks," Lucy said.

Outcare will partner with local non-government and government organisations to assist people to manage their household by developing strategies to grow their capacity and resilience. It will also help people to navigate and link up with support services and programs across government and the private sector.
