of the 7th Bav. I.R., Cologne heights by those of the 21st, and the valleys north-east of Hargicourt by the 19th. The troops on the northern side of Hargicourt valley who opposed the right of the 74th Divn. and the left of the 3rd Bn. (especially at the cross ways at Benjamin Post) were mainly the 94th I.R. (38th Divn.). The III/21st Bav. I.R. would not follow its commander when he tried to counter-attack; the commander of the regiment, Maj. Hacke, was mortally wounded and captured.

Thus by 10.30 a.m. the right of the 1st Division was consolidating the exploitation objective, overlooking Bellicourt and the Canal, while its left was beyond the second objective though short of the final one. The battalions south of the 9th were faced by a different task. There the Hindenburg Outpost-Line lay on a different ridge from that of the old British outpost-line, and higher; the slopes between were untrenched, covered with grass and thistles, and, in the 4th Division's sector, a mile wide. The German trench was protected by dense entanglement. The Australian brigadiers concerned—Leane (12th) and Drake Brockman (4th)—realised well that, whatever the Corps orders might say, the only hope of seizing such a position lay in an attack in force; it would be merely "eye-wash" to attempt it with patrols. Consequently each had given the task to a whole battalion, the 46th and 14th respectively. At the eleventh hour, when it was learnt that the British division on the right would not begin to exploit until two hours after reaching the second objective, the task of the Australian right seemed hopeless and the right brigade accordingly decided to use only patrol methods; but on hearing that Lieut.-Col. Crowther of the 14th and his brigadier were still determined to adhere to their plan of a strong attack, Lieut.-Col. Corrigan[27] of the 46th and General Leane decided that they must do the same, and safeguard both the 14th's flank and their own; but Leane advised Corrigan to attack in great depth, [27] Lt.-Col. J. J. Corrigan, D.S.O. Commanded 46th Bn. 1918. Miner; of Zeehan, Tas.; b. Kumara, N.Z., 9 Apr. 1892.
