For gallant conduct as a leader of a bombing squad in two separate bombing encounters near HEBUTERNE on 28th March and 2nd April, 1918. On the second occasion after being severely wounded he continued bombing the enemy position until his party were safe, although he was under heavy machine gun fire at close range. When eventually he extricated himself from his dangerous position he refused to be carried and walked over a mile to the dressing station in order to save the stretcher bearers who were busily engaged at the time.
