Prof Brett Williams: Dominic College 1982-1988

Professor Brett Williams has been an academic leader in pre-hospital educational research, scholarship and mentorship for over 15 years in Australia and works internationally to improve paramedic education and clinical practice.

Brett worked as an Intensive Care Paramedic in Tasmania and in Melbourne before becoming clinical instructor, then lecturer and post-graduate coordinator at Victoria University. He is now Head of the Department of Community Emergency Health and Paramedic Practice in the Faculty of Medicine at Monash University.

Brett's published research, textbooks and conference resources are award-winning and his leadership in developing the next generation of paramedics is of national and international significance.

Brett helped create and shape paramedicine as a valid academic discipline and has created an invaluable body of knowledge and scholarship in his field.

His volunteer work and his commitment to service, developed as a young person at school. 'In many ways where I am today,' he said, 'is fundamentally grounded and nurtured through my time as a student at Dominic College.'
