Future Management of Council's Coastal Reserves – Second Round of Workshops

Do you care about Hinchinbrook's beaches? Come and learn how Council plans to attack some of the many challenges that our Hinchinbrook community faces when managing its foreshore reserves and reducing the risk of future erosion.

Council, with support from various technical consultants, have developed a series of draft actions and invites all interested Hinchinbrook residents to attend the second and final round of community consultation sessions. The actions and implementation of the proposed Erosion Assessment and Options Analysis developed for each coastal location will be discussed.

First round community consultation participants were provided with foundational information to understand how Lucinda, Taylors Beach and Forrest Beach came to be, and the various coastal processes occurring in these areas. During these workshops, the community actively contributed additional local knowledge to enhance what was already available via mapping and works undertaken over many years, in order to develop a shared understanding of the system.

Following the first round of community workshops, Council invited the public to have their say on the future management options of their chosen coastal location via a community survey.

The results of these surveys can be found on Council's website, Shoreline Erosion Management Plan Community Consultation page.
