Legal Advice from a Homegrown Source

WHEN Wendy Munson was at school in Charters Towers she had no idea she would end up with a career in law.

She studied a Bachelor of Law at James Cook University after graduating from Richmond Hill State School and Blackheath and Thornburgh College, as much because of good marks at school as out of interest.

But it's a career choice she's been very happy she made, which now sees her working as an experienced lawyer with Rapid Legal Solutions.

"I was admitted as a solicitor on December 15, 1999, and have been a solicitor for almost 18 years," Wendy says.

"I've worked exclusively in the broad field of commercial law, including estate planning and administration and I've been employed in both private practice and as in-house corporate counsel."

It was that experience that drove Wendy to complete a Masters in Taxation and led her to spend time gaining experience working for the Australian Taxation Office as both a business taxation advisor and taxation auditor during a three year period.

Today, Wendy works with clients in Charters Towers, providing high-quality legal advice in a range of areas.

She said it's important for people to feel they are getting advice from accessible, everyday people that they can talk to and feel comfortable with, particularly when times are stressful.

"We don't use jargon and wherever possible work is undertaken for a fixed price, giving clients financial piece of mind," Wendy says.

"We have an office in Gill Street, which is open daily and solicitors can be seen by appointment, either in person or via video conferencing."
