Introduction

“Nereno Hill” is a mixed farming opportunity situated in the northern Wheatbelt region of Western Australia. The region is known for its strong red loamy soil types, leading to highly productive agricultural output. The holding is located in an ideal position, with proximity to both Geraldton and the Perth CBH, providing key infrastructure and essential services.

The holding has been held by the Wilson family since 1928, farmed initially by MM ‘Mac’ and Dorothy Wilson and subsequently by Doug and Eleanor Wilson, and John and Katrin Wilson with significant investment placed into improving soil quality and farm efficiencies.

Currently, “Nereno Hill” is leased by local owner operators utilising the land for broadacre cropping with the current lease term expiring 1st January 2031.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

01 Established farming enterprise in the Northern Wheatbelt, operated as a broadacre cropping operation with mixed farming capability.

02 Annual average rainfall of 341mm at the nearby Fairfield BOM site, predominantly falling during the winter growing season.

03 Approximately 605 hectares arable, currently operated for broadacre cropping and developed for versatile mixed farming.

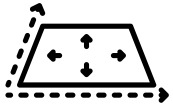

04 Water supply includes a solar equipped bore, located strategically on the holding.

05 Infrastructure includes two general purpose sheds, an original brick dwelling and four Moylan grain storage silos with concrete bases.

06 Gently undulating country with rising to low hills, red shallow loams, yellow/brown loamy earths and self-mulching clays.

WATER

“Nereno Hill” features a solar equipped bore, located in a strategic accessible location on the property, which pumps water into two 20,000 litre polythene holding tanks located on the hill, with water utilised for spray and livestock purposes. Additionally, there is an unused windmill situated alongside the bore.

STRUCTURES

The property is further complemented by two general purpose sheds, one with sliding doors (pictured bottom right) measuring 195m^2 and a secondary with drive through access of 165m^2. There is also an original dwelling built with local stone/brick, which is currently uninhabitable, and four Moylan grain storage silos with concrete bases. There are two power connection points, that require reconnecting.

LAND TYPES

Soil Types

Soil types consist of red shallow loams, yellow/brown loamy earths and small areas of self-mulching cracking clays.

Timbers

Original timbers include york gum woodlands, salmon gum and acacia.

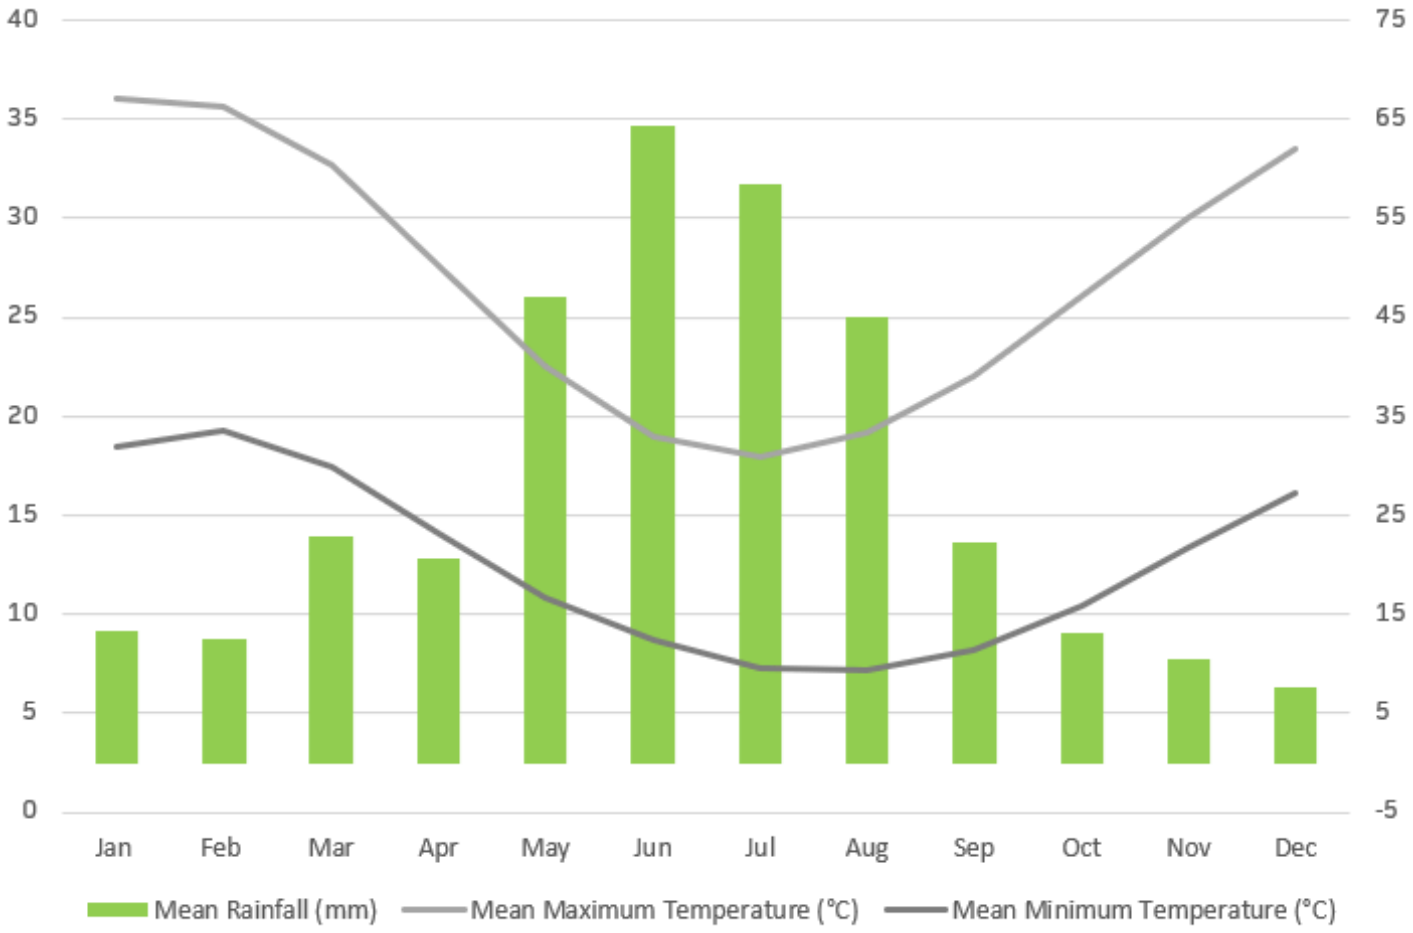

Topography

Topography across the holding is gently undulating with rises, broad ridge crests and shallow open depressions.

CLIMATE

The Bureau of Meteorology weather station at Fairfield has recorded an annual average rainfall of approximately 341 millimetres.

Rainfall in the region is winter-dominant, with the vast majority occuring within the growing season, providing a favourable environment for mixed farming pursuits.

SERVICES

The property features high voltage electricity transmission infrastructure traversing through the holding, presenting opportunities beyond its agricultural production.

With established transmission infrastructure, “Nereno Hill” presents longer term opportunities for participation in the evolving energy sector, attracting interest from renewable energy developers and infrastructure investors seeking strategically positioned land with existing electricity network access in place.

The existing network infrastructure provides an attractive proposition for future renewable energy and energy related developments, including wind and solar generation, battery energy storage and/or other energy based projects.

Additionally, Western Power is both actively expanding and upgrading the Three Springs 330kV and 132kV terminal (along the Perenjori-Three Springs Road) through the Clean Energy Link North project.

This major concentration of high-voltage transmission infrastructure makes holdings in the area highly attractive to renewable developers seeking connection points to the South West Interconnected System (SWIS).
