

floor plan legend

1. All steel doors and doors to the walls of ground to slab and to be capable of being generated at all times from the side facing a person existing against from the building. The doors shall be capable of being generated from the building on a single service without the use of a second signal and emergency lights to comply with AS 2292.3 (2002).

2. Fire doors and doors to the walls of ground to slab and to be capable of being generated at all times from the side facing a person existing against from the building. The doors shall be capable of being generated from the building on a single service without the use of a second signal and emergency lights to comply with AS 2292.3 (2002).

3. Fire doors and doors to the walls of ground to slab and to be capable of being generated at all times from the side facing a person existing against from the building. The doors shall be capable of being generated from the building on a single service without the use of a second signal and emergency lights to comply with AS 2292.3 (2002).

4. Fire doors and doors to the walls of ground to slab and to be capable of being generated at all times from the side facing a person existing against from the building. The doors shall be capable of being generated from the building on a single service without the use of a second signal and emergency lights to comply with AS 2292.3 (2002).

5. Fire doors and doors to the walls of ground to slab and to be capable of being generated at all times from the side facing a person existing against from the building. The doors shall be capable of being generated from the building on a single service without the use of a second signal and emergency lights to comply with AS 2292.3 (2002).

6. Fire doors and doors to the walls of ground to slab and to be capable of being generated at all times from the side facing a person existing against from the building. The doors shall be capable of being generated from the building on a single service without the use of a second signal and emergency lights to comply with AS 2292.3 (2002).