Thomas and Eliza Deacon built this 'hotel' in 1875 due to it's connection to the original wharf. Following the route of the Maori, migrants and early residents of Auckland would travel via the waterways before the area had roads or railway access. This link to the water made The Riverhead Hotel pivotal in the development of the wider Northwest area.

The liquor licence originally granted in 1857 was transferred to this building from the Deacon's previous tavern that was situated on the point you can see from the decks to your right. It is the same liquor licence this establishment uses today.

Thousands of travellers have passed through this building since the mid 1870's. Some would have spent the night, others had influential meetings, a few stayed longer than they should have, they all enjoyed a meal, a cool bevvy, convivial atmosphere and good old-fashioned hospitality.

Nothing much has changed in that respect.

We have developed this menu from local products whenever possible. We are passionate about cuisine and enjoy bringing you interesting choices that you'd expect from New Zealand's leading gastro pub.

We prepare all the dishes from scratch and hope you enjoy the selection. Throughout its long history, The Riverhead has offered unpretentious genuine kiwi hospitality... we intend to continue this tradition.
