This year, in addition to passing the standard exams at the end of the school year, students of final classes were obliged to write a certification essay, the results of which determined whether students will be admitted to the exams or not. For most students it was not difficult to successfully complete the task. According to RIA Novosti, only 5% of students failed the task. Nevertheless, the innovation revealed a number of problems, the discussion of which is now actively conducted in government circles.

The main problem faced by teachers, parents and schoolchildren themselves is that young people today read too little. Statistics says that only 2-3 people from each class can fully cope with the development of the mandatory program in literature. Others do not read all the works or do not read them at all. This question arose when discussing whether to give access to primary sources to students during the writing of the essay. "Do not enter students into a stupor" - decided at the top, and books on the desks was not.

Despite the fact that awkward acquaintance with the classics during the writing of the work was avoided, this issue caused a stir among officials and among people close to literature. "Association of teachers of English language and literature" offered to the attention of lawmakers a document called "the Concept of school philological education. Russian language and literature" (link to download the document). The paper presents the Association's thoughts on ways to improve reading among students. For example, they propose to increase the number of study hours allocated to literature to four per week. And stricter refer to the list of mandatory literature — students are invited to study more than 50 works per year.
